

MILLER EXPECTED TO SEEK 2D TERM

Events of Syracuse Convention
Indicate That He Will Run Again.

HIS POLICIES DEMAND IT

Criticism Appears to Reveal Intention to Seek Vindication of Voters.

Republican leaders came away from the recent State convention in Syracuse firmly of the impression that Gov. Nathan L. Miller would again be the standard bearer of the party in 1922. There had been doubt in the minds of some prior to that gathering. It had been said the Governor had expressed the desire not to serve more than one term. At least half a dozen booms for the gubernatorial nomination next year were taken to Syracuse ready to be released and pushed along. None of them flourished; most of them were not even unwrapped. It did not take long to discover that the consensus of opinion was that Gov. Miller would run again, no matter what his personal preferences might be.

This clearing of the atmosphere was one of the beneficial incidental results of the convention in the minds of the leaders. It will save much maneuvering in the course of the coming year and possibly much heartburning on the part of those who may aspire to be Governor of New York State some day.

Whatever may have been the idea of Gov. Miller as to serving only one term when he became Governor it would seem rather evident now that he could be induced to accept a renomination if there is a general demand for it on the part of the leaders. Those who heard the vigorous way in which he handled the critics of his administration in his convention speech got the distinct impression he will stand ready to defend his two years in office against all comers when the time comes. Indeed the stronger the criticism the greater will be his desire to seek vindication at the hands of the voters.

The Governor considers his economy measures have been one of the great achievements of the administration, but the work has just been started. And the Governor in his speech declared with emphasis that when he has effected all the savings he has in mind the enemy will have to reform their line of campaign against him. That his programme in taking hold of the transit situation in New York city with a strong hand will meet with success and approbation from those who have been its severest critics is one of the Governor's strongest convictions. This will be a matter to be most impressively demonstrated at the polls in November, 1921.

Another policy the Governor would be glad to have passed on by the electors of the State is that of the development of the State's water power. Criticism has been levelled at him because the programme does not contemplate development by the State, but the Governor is convinced that time will vindicate the wisdom of the plan that has been adopted.

Like Charles E. Hughes, Gov. Miller strongly believes in appealing to the people. It is predicted that in the coming year he will take advantage of every proper opportunity to place his views and achievements before the public, particularly that portion of the public which is the most interested in each particular policy.

For the first day of the Syracuse convention there was considerable talk of possible candidates to succeed Governor Miller, all based on the theory he would not again be a candidate. Among the names mentioned were: Representatives Bertrand H. Snell, of St. Lawrence county; Thaddeus C. Sweet, former Speaker of the Assembly, of Oswego county; H. Edmund Machold, present Speaker, of Jefferson county; Col. William Hayward, United States Attorney, of New York; Theodore Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, of Nassau, and Jeremiah Wood, Lieutenant-Governor, of Nassau. During the legislative session of the last winter it had been understood that Senator Clayton B. Lusk had aspirations to be candidate for Governor in 1922. But it was conceded at Syracuse that such aspirations must have been laid aside.
